About:

Best Boy Productions was incorporated in September 2001 to develop and produce television properties for national and international audiences. Best Boy is sister company to First Contact Communications, a successful marketing and communications company with a large array of clients from business, labour, and government. Like its sister company, Best Boy operates on a strict business model. It has strong and stable infrastructures, including its own building for operations and a business plan for long-term growth as a vertically integrated production facility.

Best Boy's first documentary, The Mushuau Innu: Surviving Canada was funded by Omni Television Canada and aired in October 2003 to national and international acclaim. It has since won two major awards: The Association of Canadian Broadcasting Award for Excellence in Broadcasting, and Amnesty International's National Media Award. It is currently airing in Finland.

Best Boy has three documentaries in production: two for Bravo! Canada and one for Global Television's new Global Currents documentary series. In addition to current projects, Best Boy is developing an array of other television documentary and series concepts for prospective broadcasters.

Rabbittown

2006 - Television Comedy (22:19 mins)
Small Pond Productions (Kickham East Productions)

Produced by:

Jennice Ripley

Directed by:

James Genn

Written by:

Adriana Maggs & Sherry White

Synopsis:

Odelette and Louanne. Best friends since junior high. Co-dependents. Party Animals. Fierce competitors; each measuring their own success by the other's failure. Then Odelette marries rich asshole Jason Payne and leaves the claustrophobic, small-minded neighborhood of Rabbittown. Meanwhile Louanne finds satisfaction as a big fish in a small hairdressing salon. She even starts to seek sobriety. Then suddenly, Jason dumps Odelette; with all of her bags, no money, and no self-esteem. And the competitive, backbiting, and low-blowing friendship continues.
